INCOME

- What is the average income per person per year (PPP GNP per capita) in the U.S.? $_____
- What level of consumption does the annual income of the average Indonesian allow her or him to enjoy in terms of U.S. dollar equivalents (given that someone in Indonesia is buying goods at local prices) This is know as "Purchasing power Parity" (PPP) GNP per capita see below] $_____
- In Purchasing Power Parity terms, how many people in the World are living on less than PPP$1.00 per day (i.e. in real buying power terms)? _____ people

[Note: Purchasing Power Parity (PPP) estimates of income take into account differences in cost of living that don't get reflected in official exchange rates. Since local services are cheaper in poor countries, incomes are higher in poor countries when purchasing power parity is taken into account. Once incomes are measured in PPP terms, it is no longer possible to think that "People in poor countries can live on less because things are cheaper there." If people are living on less in PPP terms it is purely because they get that many fewer goods and services. ]
